SWELL IRON BEDS.

The steamer Hawaiian brought us a big shipment of beds—all the way from the manufacturers in Chicago. Some are all brass, and some colored with heavy brass trimmings. These are high class beds, similar to the iron beds seen in the swell suites of the hotels. They are much superior to the iron beds usually sold here.

We have fine beds in the Vernis Martin finish.
Cribbs, with high sides, and all brass.

DINING ROOM RUGS.

By the Alameda we received a large shipment of grass rugs. They are of all sizes, all colors, and of many figured designs. We got them in such quantity and at a price that will permit them to be sold low. They are just the thing for the dining room or den, are artistic, and, although cheap as regards price, are not cheap in appearance.

WIRE MATTRESSES.

This climate rusts some kinds of wire mattresses. Then the rusty wires spoil the ticking of your nice mattresses. New wire springs are inexpensive and save you lots of trouble. We sell a number of different makes and as we put them together in our own workshops we can guarantee that they will not warp our break up easily.

LANAI FURNITURE.

Warm weather is approaching. Are your lanai rockers weather-worn and useless. We have a nice line of these.

THE GONG WAS RUNG

Inquest Over Street Car Victim Concludes Today.

The inquest over the remains of the late Leong See, who was killed by a car on Liliha street Monday night, continued at the Police Station last night, but as there are several statements to be signed by witnesses the jury will meet again this noon, at which time the verdict will be rendered. The sessions of the jury are attracting considerable attention and the Deputy Sheriff's office has been filled at each session with friends of the dead Chinaman, representatives of the railway company and others. The feature of last night's hearing was a visit by the jury to the car barns of the Rapid Transit Company, where the car, No. 23, that killed the man, was inspected. It was run back and forth, the fender was dropped, and the blood stains examined.

The first witness examined was a Japanese servant of Governor Carter, who was on the car when the accident occurred. She threw little light on the matter, though she stated that the bell was rung and told of the motorman's efforts to stop the car. She was followed by Miss Annie Olsen, a young girl, who saw the entire affair. She saw the car and heard the gong ringing. It rang violently just before the man was struck while the motorman dropped the fender and applied the brakes. She saw the Chinaman start to cross the track and said that she saw him go under the wheels and saw the car run over him, though as she was on the opposite side of the car it is doubtful whether she actually saw the man go under the wheels. She stated that the Chinaman had plenty of time to get out of the way after the gong was rung and before the car struck him.

Mounted Officer Fred Wright was the next witness. He was at the junction of King and Liliha streets and heard the gong ringing as far off as that. It rang violently at the last and soon after he heard a "thud-thud" and it seemed as if the car stopped instantly thereafter. The last witness was Conductor Ostergard. He stated that the car stopped for a passenger at School street, but did not stop at the next station, near the entrance of the Boys' Field, though he thought the motorman slowed down there. He was collecting a fare and issuing a transfer then.

Ostergard stated that the motorman started the car at School and then shut off his power and applied the brake, coasting down with the brake applied. After collecting the fare, witness went back to the rear of the car and when it was about at Vineyard street his attention was called to the motorman by the latter's shouting. The motorman had been ringing his gong at frequent intervals, but now he rang it violently, jammed on his brake—it was already so far on that it took but one motion to apply it as hard as possible. Witness heard and felt a bumping, although he was not sure whether it was from the fender which was scraping along the ground or was caused by the car when running over the man. The car stopped at the makai corner of Liliha and Vineyard. Witness said the motorman was a careful man and was running at a safe speed. He testified regarding the blood spots found on the fender, car and running gear. After this the jury went to the car barns to examine the car and Ostergard pointed out the stains. Deputy Sheriff Rawlins is conducting the inquest as coroner.

PELEKUNU VALLEY.

MAGNIFICENT SCENERY.

The glimpses of Molokai which one obtains from a steamer's deck while passing to Honolulu from San Francisco or in passing to and from Maui, give the impression that the island is bleak, mountainous and desolate. Skirting its shores on the Halawa, Waialua and Pelekunu sides on Wilder's fine steamer Likelike, gives a far different picture. For miles sheer precipices rise from the sea and tower 1500 feet into the air. They are not bleak rocks but are covered with the greenest of verdure. Now and then, and sometimes in groups, beautiful waterfalls are seen on the face of the cliff, now falling in clear view for a couple of hundred feet, now hidden under dense masses of foliage, only to reappear further down, another silvery link in the watery thread which ends in a splash and scintillating mist in the breakers below. Here is a waterfall, tumbling over the cliff the entire distance without a break. A pretty valley is disclosed and in the far end a waterfall. It is a land of waterfalls, with millions of gallons of water all finding a way to the sea, doing no good except to render the precipices more impressive and more beautiful, and make it a tourists' paradise. Could these falls be harnessed and sent overland to the fertile stretches of Kamao and Kaunakakai, what a wealth in sugar they would develop.

PELEKUNU AT LAST.

Now the steamer rounds into another bay and a beautiful panorama is exposed. Another valley with little hills dotted green and greener as the heights are reached by the gaze. But what a place to land. The sea here is exceptionally rough and the lava cliffs show jagged teeth on shore over which the waves swirl, crash and beat unmercifully, the spray flying far up the cliffs. A derrick poised its long arm far out beyond the rocks. The boat comes underneath it, but the boatsteerer thinks he can land the passengers without it. The bow is run between two rocks. It grinds this side, now the other with broken waves boarding the boat often. It is an exciting time, but everybody gets ashore safely. By a circuitous path the people scale the cliff, almost like mounting the pyramids and then a trail leads around the mountain and down into the valley where the huts are scattered. Not an inch of soil in a yard. Nothing but great rocks worn smooth by the water. Every yard is a stone-paved court. All paths are rounded stones. The schoolhouse sits in the midst of boulders and the pupils' playground is on a layer of loose, smooth stones. Here and there a depression shows a taro patch, and it is these, probably more than anything else, which started the typhoid fever epidemic.

WHERE DEATH STALKED.

Dr. Yost led to the house where the two boys died and from which others fled. On the floor was a suffering boy, with the unmistakable imprint of typhoid upon him. His aged father and mother were attending him with sorrow written deep upon their faces. Dr. Yost told them it was better the boy be taken to Honolulu for treatment and they could accompany him. In a few minutes they had gladly packed their few belongings. One of the trained nurses bathed the boy and prepared him for his journey and the army hospital men opened a stretcher and laid him in it. Being sure-footed upon the loose stones, two natives carried the stretcher along the path to the platform overlooking the landing place. Other houses were visited. In one was a young man, in the initial stages of fever. In the house had died the first young man to become afflicted. This boy was willing to go to Honolulu. In another house was an old woman, but she was convalescent. Others had died but were better, while many had left for other villages. Medicines and stores were left behind in the care of Miss Naopala, the school-teacher, to dispense to the sick and needy when necessary.

A MAROONED GROUP.

In the meantime it had rained. The path over the mountain had become a sticky, muddy trail. It rained again and wet the party through. Meanwhile the steamer had gone around to Kalaupapa to unload freight. She was expected back about 6 o'clock. The members of the expedition, the sick and a number of strong natives were grouped upon the rocky shelf. The sea became rougher and the waves churned and boiled and roared angrily upon the lava at the water's edge. It rained and rained and the party became wetter and wetter. The doctor was bothered about the sick boy and how he was to be lowered to the landing place. In the darkness the natives prepared a plank platform which they slung to the derrick. One by one in the gathering darkness the members of the expedition toiled down the face of the cliff, the women experiencing considerable difficulty. Conversation died out after a time as the steamer did not appear and the rain continued to fall steadily. It was a silent, damp, marooned group. Now and then a huge billow broke over the party. Some believed that the Likelike might not be able to get back that night, no one knew just why, which gave food for speculation as to where all would be able to spend the night.

Finally the steamer poked her nose around the point and came to anchor. It was total darkness save for a lantern on the cliff. Then the whaleboat came bobbing along and sheered off from the rocks. Then the derrick was manned and a request for "three men" to mount it with the lantern bearer—was made.

HOISTED BY DERRICK.

"Three of you men go ahead," said Dr. Yost, and three soldiers promptly obeyed the command. "It's funny how soldiers will be pioneers in anything," remarked Dr. Yost. "They'll be first in anything you tell them, no matter what the danger may be."

With four men crouching upon the frail platform the derrick-men raised it and swung it out and then it stuck. It wouldn't move either way. They were practically "between the devil and the deep blue sea." The platform spun round and round, dizzily but it was a motionless quartet which waited patiently upon the uncertain swing. Sometimes the boat was raised on a huge billow, several feet, and almost struck the platform. Finally the machinery was adjusted, the platform swung out, then was lowered deftly into the boat and the soldiers scrambled off. Three by three the entire party was lowered and taken to the steamer, where more difficulty was experienced in getting aboard. The sick boy on the stretcher was lowered without accident into a boat, brought aboard, and the Likelike then started for Honolulu, late at night, arriving in port yesterday morning at 5 o'clock.

THE CAUSE.

What was the cause of the epidemic, if epidemic it may be called? The reasons given by T. R. Mossman in the Advertiser on Tuesday morning, that the water courses supplying the taro patches, becoming polluted after a long spell of dryness, causing the shrimps and oops to die, etc., are very much the truth in this instance. The whole of the valley is supplied by water from the waterfalls. These water courses supply all the taro patches and water for domestic purposes. The water used at one of the first houses on the slopes where a boy died several weeks ago, may have been contaminated by passing a house just above. The water runs along by many taro patches. This water goes on to the next house, passing more taro patches, all of which are covered with green scum, and so on through the entire village.

Sanitary science is a thing practically unknown among these poor people. When one of the nurses advised the natives to boil all drinking water in future, they scoffed at the idea. They had never before boiled the water, and what was the use of beginning now, they said. The water came direct from the mountains and should be pure, so they argued. Then why the necessity for taking so much trouble with it. But contaminated water was undoubtedly the cause of the epidemic.

WHAT SHOULD BE DONE?

Molokai is without a physician except Dr. Mouritz. For a physician to give up his time and wander among the mountains giving medical aid to the poor villagers, is a task which only a philanthropist would feel like undertaking. The expense of the relief expedition will be considerable, several hundred dollars, in fact, at the least. The same amount would have kept a physician under government orders for several months on Molokai, who could do the bidding of the people whenever they might fall ill. Molokai stands out distinct from other islands in the group. In that the villagers in almost inaccessible valleys, are seldom in touch with the outer world. They are too poor to hire physicians, and from the time the people there lived under kings, until recently, they have depended upon the government to treat them while sick. It would seem a matter which the legislature could take into serious consideration.
